

Contributors

Sunil Agnani is currently completing a book entitled Enlightenment Universalism, and Colonial Knowledge: Denis Diderot and Edmund Burke, 1770–1800. He completed his doctorate at Columbia University, and then joined the Princeton Society of Fellows before starting as an assistant professor in the English Department at the University of Michigan.

Jean-Philippe E. Belleau is an anthropologist who teaches Latin American studies at the University of Massachusetts at Boston. He is also a researcher at the ERSIPAL (Équipe de Recherche: Société, Identité et Pouvoir en Amérique Latine), Institut des Hautes Etudes d'Amérique Latine, Université Paris-III Sorbonne Nouvelle.

Mary Baine Campbell teaches medieval and early modern literature and culture at Brandeis University. Her books include The Witness and the Other World: Exotic European Travel Writing, 400–1600 (1988) and Wonder and Science: Imagining Worlds in Early Modern Europe (1999), as well as two volumes of poetry. She is currently at work on a book about early modern dreams.

Giulia Cecere has recently completed her Ph.D. in the School of History and Archives at University College Dublin thanks to an Irish Research Council postgraduate scholarship. Her Ph.D. thesis is entitled “Maps, Frontiers, and Cultures: Defining Europe’s Eastern Boundaries in the Eighteenth Century.” Her current research project is “The Representation of the Characters of Populations in Early Modern Europe.”

Marco Cipolloni is professor and chair of Spanish Language and Culture at the University of Modena and Reggio Emilia. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Bologna in 1993, and is the author of many books and articles on Spanish and Latin American intellectual history, theater, and cinema. His works include Il sovrano e la corte nelle "cartas" della conquista (1991), Tra memoria apostolica e racconto profetico: il compromesso etnografico francescano e le "cosas" della Nuova Spagna (1994), Ritratto dell'artista come gringo viejo (2000, on Saura's cinematic portrait of Goya), and the critical edition of the Teatro completo of Miguel Angel Asturias (2004).

John Gascoigne is professor of history at the University of New South Wales, Sydney. His books include Joseph Banks and the English Enlightenment: Useful Knowledge and Polite Culture (1994), Science in the Service of Empire: Joseph Banks, the British State and the Uses of Science in the Age of Revolution (1998), and The Enlightenment and the Origins of European Australia (2002).

Nicholas A. Germana is a lecturer in history at Keene State College, New Hampshire. He received his Ph.D. in European history from Boston College in 2006. His dissertation was entitled "The Orient of Europe: The Mythical Image of India and Competing Images of German National Identity, 1760–1830."

Michael Harbsmeier studied anthropology and teaches history at the University of Roskilde in Denmark. His books include Wilde Völk-erkunde: Andere Welten in deutschen Reiseberichten der frühen Neuzeit (Savage Anthropology: Other Worlds in Early Modern German Travel Accounts, 1994) and Stimmen aus dem äussersten Norden (Voices from Ultima Thule, 2001). He is currently working on a comparative study of accounts of Europe by travelers from other parts of the world.

Neil Hargraves is lecturer in history at Newbattle Abbey College, Scotland. He has published several articles on various aspects of eighteenth-century historiography, and is currently working on a book on the concept of character in eighteenth-century social and historical thought. He is also researching the idea of resentment in historical narrative.

Philippe Huneman is a philosopher of science at the IHPST (Institut d'Histoire et de Philosophie des Sciences et des Techniques), CNRS (Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique), Paris. He is the author of Bichat: la vie et la mort (1998), and editor of Understanding Purpose: On Kant and Biology (forthcoming). He has published several papers on Kant and on philosophical problems of evolutionary biology. He currently works on causation, adaptation, and emergence.

Michael Kempe is an assistant in the History Department at the University of Gallen, Switzerland. He has coedited a special issue of Environment and History entitled Coping with the Unexpected: Natural Disasters and Their Perception (2003). His current postdoctoral research is a book project titled Curse of the Sea: Piracy and International Law in Early Modern Times. His research areas include history of science, legal history, and environmental history.

Jonathan Lamb is the Mellon professor of the humanities at Vanderbilt University. His books include The Rhetoric of Suffering: Reading the Book of Job in the Eighteenth Century (1995) and Preserving the Self in the South Seas (2001). He is currently at work on a book entitled The Things Things Say.

Christian Marouby is professor of French at Mills College. He has most recently published L'économie de la nature: essai sur Adam Smith et l'anthropologie de la croissance (2004). His current research centers on the question of limits in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries.

Anthony Pagden is distinguished professor of political science and history at UCLA. His books include European Encounters with the New World (1993), Peoples and Empires (2001), and La ilustración y sus enemigos (2002), and, as editor, The Idea of Europe from Antiquity to the European Union (2002). He is completing a study of the conflict between East and West in the European imagination from the Persian Wars until the present.

J. G. A. Pocock is professor emeritus of history at Johns Hopkins University. His books include The Machiavellian Moment: Florentine Political Thought and the Atlantic Republican Tradition (1975), Barbarism and Religion, I: The Enlightenments of Edward Gibbon (1999), Barbarism and Religion, II: Narratives of Civil Government (1999), Barbarism and Religion, III: The First Decline and Fall (2003), Barbarism and Religion, IV: Barbarians, Savages and Empires (2005), and The Discovery of Islands: Essays on British History (2005).

Larry Wolff is professor of history at New York University. His books include Inventing Eastern Europe: The Map of Civilization on the Mind of the Enlightenment (1994) and Venice and the Slavs: The Discovery of Dalmatia in the Age of Enlightenment (2001). His current research concerns Habsburg Galicia.